

SUMMER 2017

ART 206

Mining the University / Community

Mining the University/Community is an hybrid/online course allowing students to assemble their own intellectual experience by finding and attending creatively stimulating public events outside of their majors. Students are charged to find challenging events each week (lectures, performances, screenings, discussions of intellectual value), contribute these 'finds' to a class calendar full of possibilities, attend one of those events and then post a written evaluation of their chosen event each week to the class blog on Compass. Each student creates a collection of 14 different intellectual experiences with observations and responses shared with all class members as well as a final class post to summarize the evolution of the collection.

Contact instructor Eli Craven with any questions at ecraven2@illinois.edu